GAWTHORPE HALL

LANCASHIRE

Housed at Gawthorpe Hall in Padiham, Lancashire the Gawthorpe Textiles Collection was amassed by the Honourable Rachel Beatrice Kay-Shuttleworth MBE (1886-1967).

Rachel was a remarkable woman who worked to improve social welfare throughout her life. She truly believed that creativity was beneficial to wellbeing and happiness. A prolific lace maker and embroiderer herself, she was influenced by the Arts and Crafts Movement which sought to preserve the traditional craft skills being eroded by mass production at the turn of the 20th century. She was heavily inspired by the textiles of the past, as well as by the architectural designs of the Hall which surrounded her as she grew up.

Rachel was passionate about textiles. She was renowned for her expert knowledge and skills in needlework, as well as her dedicated work with local communities. Her aim was to pass on her knowledge and expertise to as many people as she could through teaching and lecturing on the value of crafts.

Rachel's vision was to create a craft house centred on her collection. She campaigned tirelessly to generate the funds to realise her ambition. In the years before her death, Gawthorpe Hall became her craft house - a place of learning, inspiration and enjoyment.

She filled the house with exquisite examples of embroidery, lace, costume, fabrics and textile artefacts from across the world - all beautifully and precisely labelled in her own handwriting with her favourite green ink. For Rachel, her collection was a precious teaching resource, she was passionate about inspiring people to craft and create.

The Textiles Collection remains an independent charity caring for and engaging the public with the collection which now stands at over 30,000 pieces.

A Story of Collaboration

The textile industry is woven into the fabric of the Lancashire story, which is why it is linked to many of the county's historic houses.

Award winning textile editor and manufacturer Panaz, has interpreted items from the archive of the Gawthorpe Textiles Collection to create a unique collaboration, bringing together fabric and wallcovering designs of the past with the manufacturing techniques of the future.

"I have a vision of a place of meeting where neighbours will come for many reasons to seek stimulating thought by meeting other active minds, to find refreshment and inspiration and a joy in beauty".
